Content:

This graduate seminar, open to undergraduates, will be introduced by a historical review of the European Union's development, its main institutions and policies. Then an analysis of the main features of the European Union's external relations will become the primary focus. Special attention will be given to the expanded external role of the European Commission, the development of the Common Foreign and Security Policy (including the position of the High Representative of the CFSP), the construction of an autonomous defense structure, and the projected position of a Minister of Foreign Relations under the new European Constitution. As part of the external dimension of the EU, three special components will be explored: enlargement plans to the rest of Europe, the nature of the "internal" relations and policies of selected member states with the European Union as entity, as well as their autonomous foreign policies, and the international profile and legal personality of the EU in its external competences as a result of the development of the constitutional process implemented by the European Convention.

The seminar will then deal with EU's relations with the "EU Neighborhood", the Mediterranean, the United States, and other industrialized states. The EU's practice of North-South relations, development aid, and cooperation, such as the Lomé/Cotonou Convention will follow. A brief historical review of the relations between Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean will serve as an introduction to the main features of the current links between the EU (and some selected member states) and Latin America. A comparison of regional integration architectures in the rest of the world, with special attention to the European Union experience as hypothetical model for inter-American integration, will simultaneously complete this exploration of the link to the Western hemisphere link. More importantly, how the above topics have affected the relations with the United States will be taken into account during all the discussions.

Meetings will be conducted in a lecture/seminar format, supplemented by frequent presentations by guest speakers. The expected work to be developed will be student-oriented. Participants will be able to specialize in some of the topics and geographical dimensions and de-emphasize others.

Requirements

- One major paper (30%), 15-25 pages, take-home examination (option only available to undergraduate students), or special project (approved by instructor).
- Five (5) informative reports on guest lecturers and other presentations (500-600 words). 10 points (10%).
- Additional testing. (10 points, 10%)
- Ten mini-papers/reports (50%), 600-800 words. The format is an essay, with an attractive title, developing a part of one of the “subtopics” of a unit, answering one of the suggested questions, using a number of sources equal to years of previous university, plus a news item (30-day term) to proof current value of the subject chosen. One general reading, once special reading, a report from the web, makes an ideal basic combination of a minimum number of sources.
